OK all of you who are interested in the guage bezel thanx for the props and its overwhelming. I wasn't ready for this so please be patient i will produce t as i can and a 2 year old will allow me to. They will sse for 160.00 including pressure guage and a volt meter with white faces in unpainted form. there w charege for painting i still need to talk to the painter. As far as other guages available but at a different price i'm still talking to auto meter to get pricing s know about it later. as far as just the bezel itself i need to do some final num supplier but it will probably be about 100.00 unpainted. I will keep you post i find more out like i said i wasn't ready for this kinda response.

Thanx again

Do you have any pics of these bezels? I'm confused as to where exactly it g car?
sounds pretty cool otherwise. I bet fuel pressure & a/f ratio gauges would b good combo as well.

First of all let me say that when I seen the gauge bezel it was awesome. It i clean looking and has a factory appearance. It definately has show winning and is completely functional, neither of the two gauges get in the way of any

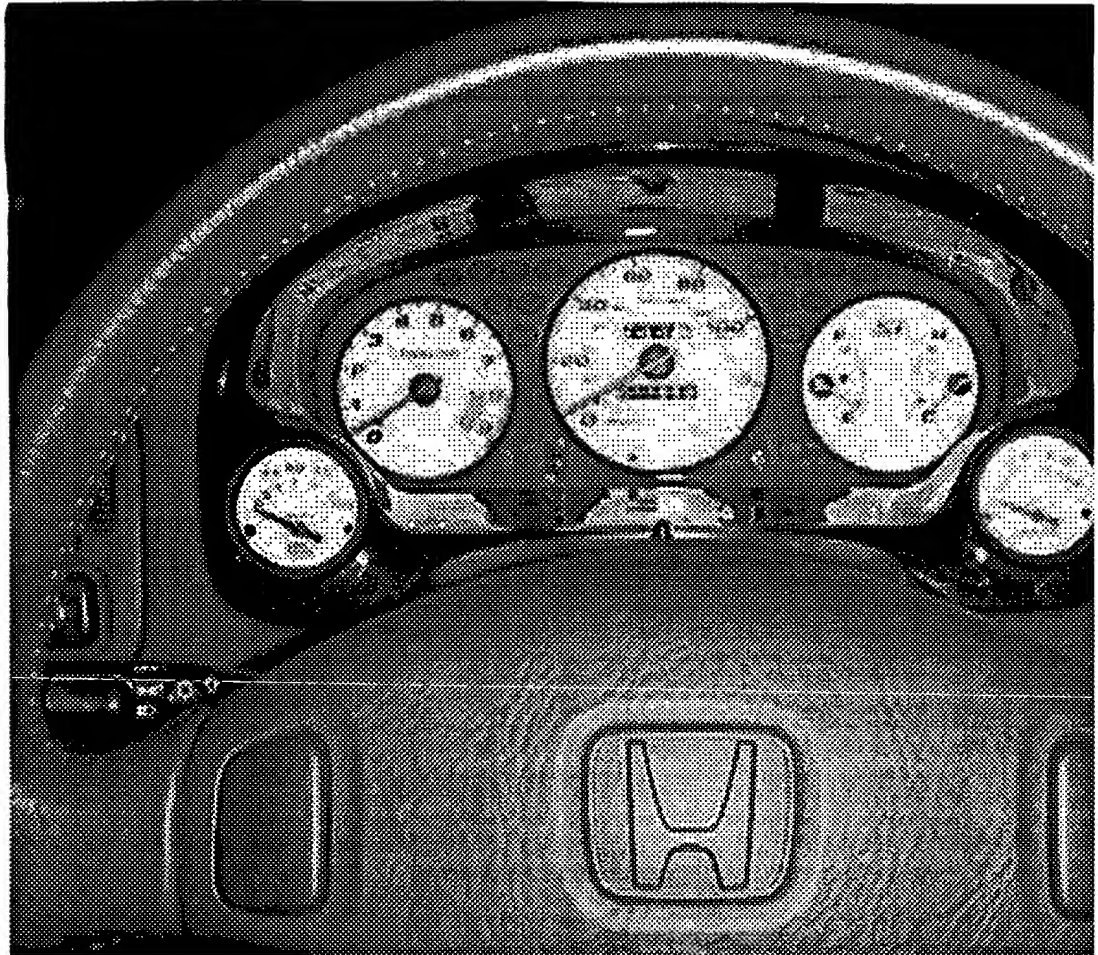

Xerxes - the gauge bezel sits right were your bezel sits in front of the gauge black peice that is right above the steering column and in front of the gauge

Here is pics that were linked to another message about this:

And the other:

Pretty damn nice looking if you ask me! I'll take one with a boost and oil temp please! (They may actually come in handy sometime in the future) Oh, and i' EBP please!

By the way, do the Autometer gauges light up close to the color of the stock

Oh, and i'm shocked that noone had thought of this before?! You've got a to maker there!

I definitely want one...unpainted and without the gauges. That is one SWEE work. Maybe we could just make this post the sign up list for who wants one check or money order to wherever I need to...just let me know.

Thanks,
John

do the added guages light, if so, what color?

how hard is the bezel install?

how hard is hooking up the guages?

sorry for the stupid questions. DAMNIT JIM., i am an artist, not a mechanic.

thx

You should post this group buy at Lundgren's site at www.redisoft.com/grou
So more people can participate.

BTW, put me down for one without guages and unpainted! It looks like the buy for RX7's in Japan.

Holy sweet oogaly moogaly! Need one badly... what commercially available oil/fuel pressure) that will fit in there look most like stock (and light up ambe Would need one not so shiney like color of stock cowl-plastic lining (you ca reflections of other gauges in paint). Well, put me on the list.

blueballs

I'll get a carbon fibre one, but i'll have to see pics first.

minh

I still can't get over how good that looks. Much better than the ricey (IMO) pi What color is the unpainted ones, if it's black plastic with a similar texture to plastic that lines the cowl, change mine to unpainted; if not: are they availab plastic with same texture as stock?

SiRacer

They are made of fiberglass... You can use a matte finish paint on them to more like the stock peice. I plan to paint mine the same color as my car. (E going to do this to the stock one but decided not to incase it looked like ass. can always repaint it black if I dont like it blue. I dont know how to make it lo textured but smooth satin black would look close.

Hey Jason, i'm not an expert painter, but that is an old car stereo trick. Whe painted completely [or on the final coat] just draw the paintgun farther away piece. This allows some of the paint to basically "dry" on its way to the plast give it a really nice texture. Makes a lot of fiberglass pieces look like OEM p wanna have your painter try it, peace.

yeah ill take one too.... no gauges and unpainted. keep me informed. also e
the painting thing, the stock black, flat bumpy looking bezel can be reprodu wise) just like ev was saying. you could almost do it with a spray can howev EXACT. i work at a factory and i believe they powdercoat their sheetmetal w good. the stuff they use is flat black and bumpy texture so that might be so into for all you non-di-it-yourselfers. probably isnt to expensive either. peac
